As one of the viewers, Sunita, we create llangolis, a colorful geometric shape filled with colored rice or sand. Thanks Sunita! Llangoli is a popular art form among Indian women. Llangoli are painted on the ground in front of the house using colored rice flour, sometimes complemented by petals and other colorful materials. Llangoli are usually drawn in the Tamil months of Markage (between December 15 and January 15). Hindu presage: For a month in Markaji, the goddess Andal prayed to Lord Tirumal to marry her. Her wishes I began to pray to have a husband who was true and that others were dreaming. This month, married women draw llangolies to greet Lord Tirumal in the hope that they will bring the same luck as andal. Instructions: Print the selected template. Color Design (see coloring options below) Coloring options: - Pastel crayons and poster paint both have good bright colors and make a great choice for young children coloring in Llangoli. - Salt glitter is another interesting choice. It's a little messy, but some kids like a bit of a mess when they craft. - Colored rice is another choice: real llangoli are usually made from rice paste, and colored rice is a good option. On food-colored rice: Add a healthy amount of food coloring to 2 teaspoons of rubbing alcohol in a ziplock bag. Pour in about 3/4 cup of uncohered rice. Close the bag. Shake well and pour it into dry wax paper or aluminum foil pieces (such as shakes and baking) and make colored rice messy and food colors don't come out of clothes well (put it on a cookie sheet so it doesn't accidentally knock on the floor) ... The wobbly part can be done by children, but the rest should be done by adults. I know it's rich in color, but I love using foods that color pasta instead of drops, but drops also work. Dry (about 1/2 a day -- less if you spread well in warm, airy places) - once again, I won't listen to my own advice... Our rice was dry about 5 minutes before we used it... We made sure we had a wet cloth to wash our hands. Print Template: After printing, close the Template window and return to this screen. If you're having trouble fitting a template to a page, set the page margins to 0 (file, page setup or FILE, printer settings in most browsers).
